Karen: Are you still free for dinner tonight?
me: we have to eat with Chris Byrne tonight to run a project by him me: the art dealer guy
Karen: OK, I love you. Also, I want you to know that I DO support your telling the truth about yourself, I would just have hoped that the GOOD truth would have been presented alongside the bad. The piece was very slanted toward the sensational/sleazy aspects of your existence.
me: I think it did a good job of explaining what I've accomplished me: it reads like anything you'd see on Hunter Thompson, P.J. O'Rourke, etc Karen: I just don't want you to miss out on future work by appearing to be someone who is a loose-cannon drug addict.
me: I don't think that's going to be a problem Karen: OK, well I also think it might be a good idea to wait for more media interviews until you're off of heavily sedating drugs.
me: I'm off of heavily sedating drugs me: it sucks
Karen: Well, I really do hope you'll ask Nazempoor on Monday what he thinks you should try instead of Zoloft and who he can refer you to to prescribe it for you.
me: yeah, I'll do so Karen: OK. Have fun tonight. I love you so much.
me: k, love you too
